the old Roman crowding around these tablets to got a look at the latest news. But the thirst after knowledge and the curiosity of the people grew no rapidly, that the government, the only assuer of a journal, found itself obliged to issue a daity. Some of these journals, having reached the age of 2,044 years, are still in existence. The name of the first daily journal was Acta Populi Romani Diurni; it appeared daily, either as the tablet hung out in public, or written with red chalk on the walls of the bouses. The contents of the journal comprised what would be classed as daily news in our modern papers. From the want of the necessary material, political articles were not to be had.

In debt, would have been materially checked.

Most of the States wisely exempt a certain portion of an individual's property from being taxed, on the ground that it is necessary for use in acquiring a livelihood. Let the same principle be applied to churches. Exempt them, to a certain amount, and more even justice would be done than by a general exemption or none at all. If it would not be churches out of the public treasury, why should the same thing be done indirectly by exempting them from paying taxes. The exemption of the property of Massons, Odd Fellows and other benevolent societies, organized to do their work among themselves, Mr. Gibson could see no good reason for. Private schools are in the same category, instituted and carried on for personal gain.

The following is a verbal translation from the oldest journal extant, issued 168 years before the birth of Christ: "Consul Sicunius was the acting judge to-day. There was a heavy thunder storm, and the lightning split an oak at the foot of the hills of Vela. In a hostery at the foot of the hills of Janus there was a fight, in which the landlord was badly

The broker Ausidius fled from town to-day, taking money with him belonging to other people. He was caught, and had to refund the money. The brigand Demiphon, who was captured by officer Nerva, has been crucified to-day. The flottills from Asia arrived to-day. The flottills from Asia arrived to-day. The proper in everything occurring to the state, and we find this quotation in Sustomus: "Julius Casar, as soon as he had entered his public office, caused not only to be written but also spread among the people, the proceedings of the senate."

This was the first political paper, and as it contained news about buildings, births, deaths, executions and aneschotes, it can be likened very much to our modern papers. It seems incredible, but it can be proved that already in the olden times there were stenographers who took down the speeches made in the senate or in public. They were called "Notari," and we find a place in Sustomius where Augustus is angry because the stenographers reported the epoch of Casar for Metellus m a very meperfect manner. There must have been rothe speech of Casar for Metellus in a very imperfect manner. There must have been reporters, judging from a letter of Cicero to Casius; also private reporters who gathered the news, and sent them by the "cursus publicus," an institution similar to our mail, throughout the provinces.—Poster's Magazine.

three beautifal pictures; and the story of Spray is illustrated with a remarkably life-like portrait of the wise little clack-and-tsn. The Peterkins' Tea Party is a most interesting and amusing occasion. Tommy's Cousins is a very funny story, with even funnier pictures by Church; Annetta Piummer's Diary—a remarkable journal—is revealed to us by Abby Morton Diaz; and Joel Stacy's record of the Naughty throughout the provinces.—Poster's Magazine.
